TULIA CHRISTINA.

The story is as follows.

In 1932, the ship was anchored off the coast of South America. The captain, Mr. X. Y., received a letter from a relative in Buenos Aires.

The letter asked the captain to take care of his wife, Mrs. Z., who was expecting a child. The captain agreed and promised to look after her until the baby was born.

A few weeks later, Mrs. Z. gave birth to a healthy baby boy. The captain named him after his own son, John.

However, soon after the birth, Mrs. Z. fell ill and passed away. The captain was heartbroken but knew he had to continue on his journey.

He named the baby after his late wife and took him on board the ship. The baby quickly became the talk of the crew and everyone loved him.

But不幸的是, several months later, while the ship was docked in another port, the baby fell ill and died. The captain was devastated and blamed himself for not being able to save the baby.

He named the ship after his late wife and the baby, and ever since then, the ship has been known as "TULIA CHRISTINA," a reminder of the love and loss that marked its beginnings.

The end.
